SPENCER FLOWERS.

To the Herald:

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Marion Flowers and claimed for himself the eldest son, Spencer, who had, you might say, just entered manhood. Spencer's inclination led him to the railroad, where he had from a section hand, been raised to different places of trust. He led a very quiet, peaceable life, making friends wherever he went. He spent a large portion of his time attending to his own business and the balance of it to letting everybody else alone. I never heard him speak a harmful word against any living human. Could all our boys imitate him in these traits, there would certainly be more love existing one for another. Mr. and Mrs. Flowers have the sympathy of the neighborhood.
